- A scalable process-driven, personalized CRM - Capable of tracking sales, customers, deals and orders - Ongoing Sales and Customer support - Track all interactions - inbound and outbound - with customers, prospects and partners - Track all interactions with suppliers and distributors - Customized marketing tools - Built-in workflow tools to eliminate duplicate record keeping - Includes many of the programs that a typical small business would need to run smoothly and profitably - Simple to use See also Customer Relationship Management (CRM) References External links Product video Official website Category:CRM softwareQ: PHP Variables don't seem to affect HTML output I'm making a notepad and I wanted a pop-up box when a user clicks 'new' but it seems like my variables aren't affecting the HTML that's outputted on my website. I have an 'edit' button that doesn't seem to work as well. It displays, but it doesn't appear to have any effect. Here's the HTML Write the note here. And here's the PHP $name = $_POST['note']; $note_text = $_POST['note_text']; $note = $name; $notetext = $note_text; Then when they click 'new' the PHP sends it to the database, so it's the HTML that's getting the result after the PHP and everything, that's why I need those variables. But for some reason, when they click on the new, the box shows up but their $name/$note_text variables don't seem to be changing what's inside it so it doesn't show up, and the 'edit' button doesn't work at all. Here's the PHP for the edit
