Google Toolbar and Google Desktop. At first, the Google Toolbar will support an easy-to-use menu bar with all the settings, whereas the Google Desktop will allow the user to have a look at the calendar along with the emails, RSS feeds and internet addresses. The Google Toolbar is the older version and has a collection of extra features such as a search form, URL shortener, weather forecast, stock quote and much more. Some of the extra features can be found in the free version of the Google Toolbar, while many others can be accessed by using the premium version. But now, the Google Calendar on the browser would be available in two versions – the web version and the mobile version. Android users are able to view their all favorite events and the ones that they have invited on their tablets or phones, while iPhones and iPads can view their events only on their tablets. As the calendar can be seen by the Google Toolbar as well as the calendar apps installed on the smartphones, all the events are visible to the users and it is possible to view them using the ‘Add to Google Calendar’ button
