the top of his game right now and while there is no doubt that he is a decent shot-stopper, his stats remain worrying for fantasy managers. His career record is very poor (5.13 saves per 90 minutes), he is giving away 0.24 goals per game, and there's no guarantee that he will continue to work as hard as he did in the second half of the last campaign. The hope is that an improved partnership with Julian Speroni – the pair have swapped places in the pecking order – will lead to more save-percentage improvement and, consequently, more fantasy value. It's a gamble, but I'm sticking with Hamer until his form improves. DF: Danny Rose 09e8f5149f

Phosphorous chemistry of early Earth: synergy between organic matter biochemistry and mineral hydrothermal processes. Organic matter production, mineral precipitation and dissolution, and geochemical reactions could have greatly influenced the Earth's chemistry. By coupling organic chemistry with hydrothermal mineral precipitation and dissolution, we can address these questions. Specifically, we investigate the reaction between phosphorous and organic matter and determine the chemical consequences of these reactions. We show that the presence of phosphorous in a reducing environment favors the formation of phosphorous-bearing compounds and suggests an important role for phosphorous in the early Earth's chemistry. The greatest concentrations of phosphorous are observed in rocks that were formed by hydrothermal processes. Detailed analyses of the reaction of phosphorous with organic matter, organic-mineral-water slurries and experimental data reveal that the oxidation of phosphorous in the initial stages of organic matter oxidation may lead to the incorporation of phosphate into large molecules and, thereby, to the precipitation of phosphates. the day of the week it was the worst day this week."
