A staffer at a circus in Italy has become the second person to be publicly charged with bestiality after police uncovered evidence of the offence. The female circus worker, who has not been named, is due to appear in court to face the charges. Investigators found a letter addressed to the circus boss, in which the woman confessed to the crime. The circus worker, who was employed by the Circo Marina Di Tora, in Italy's northern Piedmont region, has admitted to police that she had had sex with a chimpanzee. The 20-year-old woman said that she had visited the chimp, still living in a cage outside the circus, and had had sex with him three times in the last three years. The woman has been charged with bestiality and the case is expected to go to court in the local port town of Savona on December 8.

The program is capable of auto-tagging multiple music files in the same folder using deep file and folder structure analysis. You can filter the tags returned. You can also export the tags as custom CSV files. The program will also compare music metadata tags with the same tags in another audio file to see if they match or not.Q: Why does drupal 7 clone whole template.php into a new file? Why does drupal 7 clone template.php into a new file when the template engine is replaced by twig? A: Drupal's template system is made to work for a particular (Drupal) site, but if you want to just use templates across sites, or sites within a larger system, you can use a front-end view. Inside the site's admin UI, which can be accessed via a menu link to Structure > Views, you can create a view that only displays a single node (or any other content) and create a block that displays that view. The template.php file is still needed, because Drupal's template engine is only one option, and it doesn't take a lot of extra code for that to work. But it's less code and less specialized, and you can just have one file for a particular site that does things once. A: The main reason is to avoid dealing with incompatible versions of PHP in future. Using something like Twig would allow you to swap in a new version of Twig without replacing the core template files. -4] ----- Pre-immune goat serum was prepared in phosphate-buffered saline (PBS) and administered at the 1 : 10 dilution by i.p. injection.
