TrayPing Crack For Windows is a freeware tool that lets you check whether a remote computer's operating system is Linux or Windows. It creates a tray icon on your desktop that displays the system's version of Microsoft Windows or Linux (if it's available). The program has an optional automatic update option that will keep you abreast of latest versions available for all operating systems that it supports. The Tool Before installing the program, please check the requirements carefully. Minimum requirements for Windows Vista 1 GHz (1.5 GHz recommended) 256 MB (512 MB recommended) Windows Vista or higher Desktop background image required (128 KB or smaller) Desktop icons required (100 KB or smaller) For Windows 7 1 GHz (1.5 GHz recommended) 512 MB (1 GB recommended) Windows 7 or higher Desktop background image required (128 KB or smaller) Desktop icons required (100 KB or smaller) TrayPing works without installation. Simply copy the program files to any directory. TrayPing can be uninstalled if you want to; or you can just delete all configuration files. The TrayPing icon on your desktop will display a message if there are any updates available for your operating system. WinRAR is a freeware file archiver and compression tool that will help you create self-extracting archives. The compact and simple user interface includes a file browser, folders manager, archive creation window, general settings page and a tabbed help window. Many options can be set from the main settings panel (application modes, compression types, output selection, etc.). WinRAR can handle archives of .ZIP, .TAR and .RAR format and multiple archives can be opened simultaneously. It works both offline and online. The latter supports the HTTP protocol and serves as a web page builder. Built-in Web servers can be used for several tasks, such as uploading files, downloading archives or serving directories. For instance, you can use WinRAR to serve your web pages or to exchange them with your friends. What's more, you can install the software as a service (Windows Service) or set it to autostart. As far as the built-in Web server is concerned, it uses the most common protocols, including HTTP, FTP, HTTPS, WebDAV and even IMAP, and thus covers many needs. You can even choose to have WinRAR create a compressed archive of the files that are

TrayPing

TrayPing is a small tool that monitors the incoming/outgoing tray icons for Outlook. It is particularly useful when you have a lot of email messages in your tray and it is usually the number of simultaneous processes that can trigger an issue. TrayPing is a small program that is working as a tray application but, as its name suggests, it monitors the incoming and outgoing icons on the tray. You can do it real-time using the tray's Windows icon to check the status of email messages and receive notifications on email status changes. TrayPing can also set a scheduled task to periodically take a snapshot of all email messages in the tray. How to use it? Installing TrayPing on your computer is pretty easy. To add TrayPing to the tray, go to "Start > Settings > Control Panel > Programs" and add TrayPing.exe to the "Startup" tab. Click OK to confirm and you're done. You can also use TrayPing directly from the command line. Simply download the application, extract the files to your hard drive, and double click TrayPing.exe. The application will run on its own, after which you can press ESC to return to the prompt. Here's a tip. To hide the TrayPing icon from the tray, click the "Cancel" button and move the control to somewhere else, like the taskbar. From there, right click on the icon and click "Disable". You can easily put TrayPing back to the tray by opening the control again. You can also use TrayPing to monitor not only email but any other program that has an attached icon to the tray.
