Personally, I switched to Adobe Illustrator for my web layouts. I use Photoshop to work with raster images, but Illustrator is great for working with pixels, ... and when it comes to vector graphics, I tend to prefer working with Illustrator over other editors like InDesign. Did I mention that I use InDesign when creating a website layout? If so, then you know that it's such an editor that once you start using it, you can't go on without it. In Illustrator, you can work using vectors rather than pixels, which is what the Raster/Paths group tools are used for.
