Haskell was a popular language at that time, and so was Common Lisp. I don't think I've ever been excited about programming the same after reading it. I think the key points are in the Abstract and, in any Lisp, about the need for protocols and OO interfaces. The last point on property lists has me excited, but I am mostly interested in clojure. That said, I would like to learn

Q: Why won't my Tuple2 retain its type if I convert it to a List? I have a class called Least, which has a mutable member variable called value that I want to sort. It also has a method called least(). I have a list of Least called leastList, and I want to sort leastList using the least() method. However, when I do so, I end up with a list of Integer instead of Tuple2 (since least() returns a Tuple2 and an error if I try to pass it a List). The following are my two test files.

test.least: import java.util.List; public class test { public static void main(String[] args) { List leastList = new ArrayList();
leastList.add(new Least(5,10)); leastList.add(new Least(2,10)); leastList.add(new Least(7,5)); leastList.add(new Least(1,10));
leastList.add(new Least(8,5)); leastList.add(new Least(4,3)); System.out.println(leastList); List> leastList2 =
leastList.stream().map(Least::least).collect(Collectors.toList()); System.out.println(leastList2); 1d6a3396d6

Here's an update on our seventh project - a trip to the Nîmes in France for the home brewer, Brian Calautti of Rochester, NY: Hi all, We are finally here. Today we went to the Nîmes in France. We traveled from our home in Belgium, to Paris, and on to Nîmes. We stayed in a hotel in Nîmes with a big home brewing community. We visited our first brewery on our first day and met other people who share our interests. We had a great time and will look forward to coming back to Nîmes. Our visit lasted four days and now we are back home. We are in the evening and could not wait to post our experience. We had a good time, but it was not all that we expected. We arrived to a lovely sunny weather and right away we went to the hotel to check in. We got a big smile from the receptionist when he heard that we had come for a home-brewing trip. We had not planned much so our first morning we went to the brewery. On our way we walked through the old town of Nîmes. We looked around and noticed some interesting signs. We did not know what we would have to do in Nîmes so we got in touch with a guy who lives in the city and who has done home brewing in the past. We took the bus into the center of Nîmes and he told us where we should go. We visited a small brewery. It was one of the smaller ones where we could see one man brewing and one woman blending. The man had a ladies' bar, a table with some beer mats, and a cooler on the left wall. We talked a lot with him and he had a lot of knowledge on the brewing process. He invited us to sit at
