CT diagnosis of superficial and deep inguinal hernia. The purpose of this study was to review the indications, anatomy, preoperative workup, surgical technique, and CT diagnosis of superficial and deep inguinal hernia. The study was performed from July 1994 through June 1995 on 91 hernias that were clinically suspected to be inguinal. The material was composed of 51 hernias with a superficial location (direct inguinal hernia) and 40 hernias with a deep location (indirect inguinal hernia). The patients were examined clinically, sonographically, and by computed tomography, which has been performed preoperatively and postoperatively. CT was performed with a 4-slice system. After initial CT examination, in all patients, the hernias were confirmed. All of the 51 direct inguinal hernias were diagnosed preoperatively. After hernia repair, in all patients, the hernia could be confirmed by palpation and by CT. All 40 indirect inguinal hernias were diagnosed by CT only. The indirect inguinal hernia is difficult to detect clinically. CT is the method of choice for diagnosing indirect inguinal hernia, because after surgical repair it can be confirmed easily.
