Spitzer is a near-infrared camera aboard the space observatory named after the astronomer Peter Michelson. The camera is built to look at the light from objects that are otherwise invisible to Earth-bound astronomers. The camera orbits Earth along with the space observatory called NEOWISE (Near-Earth Objects Wide-field Survey Explorer). The project is tasked with exploring and cataloguing near-Earth objects (potentially) hazardous to our home planet. Spitzer screensaver allows you to view images taken from the observatory. The screen saver can be stopped with the click of the mouse or at any time. Key Features: -Enjoy the amazing photos from Spitzer space telescope -Spitzer is a near-infrared camera -The screen saver displays pictures taken by the Spitzer space telescope -Your computer screen will be changed into space-like scenery while the screensaver is on -The picture display is animated -The screensaver can be stopped with the click of the mouse -Spitzer screensaver can be switched between images taken by the camera from Spitzer space telescope and near-Earth objects Supported Windows versions: -Windows XP -Windows 2000 -Windows NT 4 -Windows Me

[A case of diabetes mellitus with a sharp fall in insulin secretion and peripheral blood glucose level during acute exacerbation of interstitial pneumonia]. A case of diabetes mellitus with a sharp fall in insulin secretion and peripheral blood glucose level during acute exacerbation of interstitial pneumonia (AEIP) was reported. The patient was a 75-year-old male who had been diagnosed as having non-insulin dependent diabetes mellitus, on the basis of a sharp fall in blood glucose level following meals accompanied by marked polyuria and polydipsia, after experiencing flu-like symptoms. In 1984 he was admitted to our hospital because of a lower respiratory tract infection. At that time, there were no signs of other organ disorders except for diabetes mellitus. In March 1985, his respiratory condition deteriorated suddenly and he was admitted to our hospital. On admission, the levels of serum protein, blood glucose, and blood urea nitrogen were markedly reduced. In addition, increased lactate dehydrogenase activity and hypoalbuminemia were seen. He was treated with parenteral nutrition and recovered after 3 months. However, in the autumn of 1985, he experienced a fever and a high fever again. The levels of serum protein and blood glucose were again reduced. We suspected
